BARBECUE.

DALLAS, October 17, 1874.

The chairman of the committees in the different precincts on contributions will please report the results of their labors, the amount and kind of their contributions, on Monday, the 26th instant. It is desirable that these reports be made in order that we may know what is contributed, and what may be necessary to be supplied.

W. L. CABELL,

Chairman Executive Committee.

NO MAN can vote in the approaching election for members of congress unless he is a registered voter. The clerk of the court is the official registrar for the county. Persons who were registered last year are not required to register again. All persons not heretofore registered, who are qualified to vote at the election to be held on the 3d of November, must register their names with Captain A. Harwood, county clerk, or on or before the 31st day of October, otherwise they will not be allowed to vote.

The election for members of congress takes place in thirteen days from date, that is, on next Tuesday week, the 3d day November. As the election of Hon. J. W. Throckmorton has been looked upon as a foregone conclusion since his nomination at Fort Worth, there has apparently grown up an indifference to the matter in the minds of the people. This indifference or apathy is only seeming; it is not real; if to-day the word was passed along the line from Kaufman to Parker, and from Cooke to Hill, that any serious opposition to the favorite of north Texas had developed itself and was in the field, there would be a simultaneous and enthusiastic arousing of the true and tried democracy of the third district that would sweep away the hopes of the opposition as the mists of the morning are made to disappear before the rising sun. We almost regret that a race of some interest could not be gotten up that would call forth the energies and powers of north Texas democracy, so that it might be demonstrated to the world how much our nominee is loved by those who have known him longest and best. But there is no chance for such a race; the election of Throckmorton is as certain as the happening of any other future event about which no doubt is entertained.

Knowing this to be so, and feeling that the voters of the third district know it to be so, we propose to give briefly some reasons why we think every democrat in the district should nevertheless feel it his bounden duty to come forth on the third of November and cast his vote for the nominee of the party.

First, then, it is a duty he owes to the party. Figuratively, a political party is represented as an army in the field, arrayed against its opponents. The members of the party are the soldiers of the army. Election days are the days of conflict, when every man's place is around the colors of his command. It may be said, and the busy and the indifferent alike may seek to justify their staying away from the polls on the plea, that the 3d of November is not to be a day of battle, that it will be rather like a review of the forces. Grant that it is only a review—the object of a review is that the commander may determine the force and efficiency of his army, and the orders to attend are just as peremptory and binding as the orders to move to the field of combat. The party orders all who march under its colors to form around the ballot boxes on the morning of the third of next month, and it is the duty of all who are enlisted under its banners to obey the order without stopping to inquire the necessity for or utility of it.

Second, it is a duty we owe to our candidate. We have selected him and entered him in the race. He has made the campaign at our command. We implicitly pledged ourselves when we placed our standard in his hands, that we would be with him till he furled it in victory. The election is the time that we are called upon to redeem that pledge. This world our simple duty, no matter who our candidate might be. Good faith in the members of a party would require them to stand up unflinchingly for him whom they had placed in their van as a leader. But when we recall who our standard bearer in this contest is, and remember all that he has done for Texas, and for the third congressional district particularly, obligations of a much higher nature than those made simply upon party fealty render it imperative upon us that we should come forth on the day of election and testify at once our appreciation of the democrat and our attachment to the man. We do not propose to go into any extended eulogy of Governor Throckmorton. The old Texans know of their own knowledge what his services to Texas have been. The later Texans knew before they came here that he had won a reputation that could not be confined within state lines, but which had run throughout the limits of the union, co-extensive with that of many other statesmen of the Lone Star state.

The party in the third district is paying what is owing to Governor Throckmorton will be honoring itself more than it will hurt.

Third, it is a duty we owe to the state. In the present posture of political parties, with the effort being made to possess the northern mind with the idea of a "new rebellion" in the south, and with the evident disintegration of the republican party, as manifested by the result of the elections in the northwest, it is impossible to forecast what the party in power may not attempt to do next winter in congress in order to maintain their hold upon the government. We are bound hand and foot and at the mercy of the north. Our only hope is in an intelligent and honest public opinion there. In order that that public opinion may be intelligently informed of the true condition of affairs, it is essentially important that no opportunity should be lost by us to give expression to our sentiments at the ballot box. A radical is in the field against our candidate, one who endorses all the ruinous and disorganized measures of that party. It is due to our own manhood to come forward and register our adherence of such political principles as lie at the basis of radicalism; and it is a sacred duty that we owe to Texasto come forward and protest by her name against the attacks upon states rights and civil liberty that are daily being made by the national administration.

The state needs every democratic vote to show correctly to the people of the north what her true sentiments are, and also to aid in thwarting any possible scheme that might be inaugurated to rob her of her representation and give her seats in the national capital to strangers and money changers.

Let every democrat, then, in the third congressional district, resolve that he will lay aside every other duty on the 3d day of November next, until he shall have deposited his ballot for Hon. J. W. Throckmorton, the democratic nominee for congress from this district.

The United States marshal for the northern district of Alabama having forwarded his official budget of manufactured southern outrages to Landjet Williams, wherein he mentioned the northern men living in that country prepared and published the card which will be found below. It is signed by twenty-seven names, some of them ministers of the gospel, others republican county officials:

To the Honorable George H. Williams, Attorney General of the United States:

We believe the convention, when called to frame a new constitution, ought, primarily, to provide for the election of every state, district, county and precinct officer, from the governor down to a justice of the peace. We believe that every officer in the state, without a solitary exception, ought to be elected by the people. We do not believe in the right of appointment of a solitary official. Let's have no more appointment of supreme court, attorney general, secretary of state, of district judges, or even precinct constables. It is a cardinal principle of democracy that every agent of the people in any department sever, should be directly selected by them. Let all official patronage be removed and swept away.

A REGULAR old fashioned fist fight took place on the square one evening this week. It does one's heart good to witness one of those good old fashioned rough and tumble fights, after having spent years in the art of fighting with pistols, guns and knives. We long to see these old time fights revived, when a man can literally chaw another one up without running the risk of having his carcass riddled with bullets or cut into sausage meat with bowie knives. —[Pilot Point Citizen.]

Texas Grand Prize Concert Postponed to October 22, 1874.

The Hon. James T. D. Wilson, mayor of Houston, and the city council endorses the enterprise as follows:

Houston, Texas, April 29, 1874.

We, the undersigned, regard the real estate distribution, which J. E. Foster proposes to make on the 23d of October next, in this city, as calculated to promote improvements, and placing within the reach of many, who otherwise would be unable, a chance to secure a home for them and their families, and, having, from our long acquaintance with him, every confidence in his integrity, we feel justified in saying that we believe he will carry out his distribution honestly and fairly, according to his advertised plan.

Signed by the mayor, the Hon. James T. D. Wilson, and city council.

Capital prize, $5,000, gold, ten residences in Houston; population 20,000, and the railroad center of the state; 150 tracts of land in different portions of the state. Value of prizes, $145,000; 73,000 tickets, at $2 each.

The management are so well convinced of the success of the enterprise, that they feel justified in promising to refund every cent of money, if the drawing does not take place on 23d of October. Every prize paid in full, whether all the tickets are sold or not. Send for circulars. Agents wanted. Address

Well Worth Reading.

Who is there that does not desire to be always exempted from indigestion—to have a good appetite, a painless stomach, a clear head, a regular pulse, a healthy complexion?

If this meets the eye of any who are not thus blessed, let them try Hostetter's stomach bitters. We guarantee that this delightful tonic will restore any stomach, however weak, to a healthy condition; that it will bring back the truant appetite, and give permanent vigor to the whole system.

The feeble and emaciated, suffering from dyspepsia or indigestion in any form, are advised, for the sake of their own bodily and mental comfort, to try it. Ladies of the most delicate constitution "testify to its harmless and its restorative properties.

Physicians everywhere, disgusted with the adulterated liquors of commerce, prescribe it as the safest and most reliable of all stomachics.

ONE OF OUR DEAD.

DALLAS, TEXAS, September 21, 1874.

To the Editor of the New Orleans Bulletin:

DEAR SIR—In your issue of the 18th instant, the inclosed notice appeared.

I wish to make the following corrections: The family of Captain J. M. West is not in a destitute condition;

nor do they ask aid of the good people of New Orleans. All the other members of the family beside myself are residents of the north, and though the blow was a sad one, and we deeply mourn his loss, yet we cannot but feel thankful that he fell in so good cause, and truly hope that his as well as the other lives that were rendered up on that eventful Monday were not sacrificed in vain. God speed Louisiana, is our fervent prayer.

Yours, etc., RICHARD M. WEST.

Rough Overstreet was arrested near Forney the other day by Mr. A. J. Smith, and sent to Lampasas springs, where he much needed to explain the manner in which certain horse disappeared.

McCann was sent to the penitentiary for four years. "Pretty good," said McCann, when the sentence was read.

The person murdered near Prairieville, some time since, is now thought to be a young man by the name of Green.

A young man is lodged in jail, charged with hiring a horse at the Ferrell livery stable and taking it to Elmo and selling it. He says he was drunk and only pawed the horse.

Mr. Grasshopper is going west of Kaufman county.

Their names were John Garrett and Bill Weeks; offense, carrying six-shooters; fines, $80; trial before Justice Daugherty and arrested by his watchful bailiff, A. J. Smith.

Dallas has more energy than half of Texas. After the grand barbecue, they proposed to have a grand Mardi Gras celebration. In enterprise she is now the Chicago of the southwest and soon will be in wealth and population.
